Because the United States has signed a non-proliferation treaty and has no intention of using their warheads on another country in the foreseeable future, while Iran has neither of these qualities?

The US didn't attack Iraq "becuz they have a weak army." It was because we suspected that they were secretly stockpiling biological and chemical weapons to use against Israel and Kuwait (and Iran, but we didn't care so much about this). Or because George W. wanted to finish the job George H.W. started in the Gulf War, which should have been done the first time. (Just so you know, at the time of the Gulf War in 1991, Iraq had the 4th largest military in the world.)

I hope you're not so naive to assume that Iran will not try to make nuclear weapons once they have the ability to refine uranium. They have two reasons to do so: to have a bargaining chip in diplomatic relations with the West (mainly over oil) and to threaten/attack their rivals in the Middle East (Israel, Iraq, Saudi Arabia).

And what a stupid title for a thread. Sounds a lot like what's being chanted in Iran about America. But I guess if thrash300 says it, that makes it ok.
