Let's see...

1. You see a picture of a Goth wearing a pentacle. The picture was posted as a sad attempt at humor to suggest that Venom Pawz got the scar on the top of her wrist by attempting to slit her wrist, not from a cyst removal. Lame humor aside...
2. You immediately assume that the image is of JohnDoe and proceed to inject your imperical knowledge of the universe since everyone else on the planet runs around their daily lives in ignorant trances.
3. You assume that since the image posted is a Goth dude wearing a pentacle that JohnDoe is a pentacle wearing Goth. You also assume that because the pentacle is on a Goth, that he is probably just like most of the other Goth's you know and doesn't have a clue what the pentacle around his neck really stands for. After assuming all that, you proceed to assume.. well, assume may not be the correct word, you were actually just hoping that he wasn't stupid.. like all those other Goths you know.
4. After "hoping" that he knows that the pentacle is a sign of life, not Satan. (and that's a direct quote) you concede that it is actually accepted as a sign of both (making your entire "hopeful" sentiment moot).

That was my point.. but I'm guessing you already knew that.

Instead of passing your opinion off as fact, had you stated "Do you wear the pentacle as a sign of life, or a sign of Satan?.. I consider it a sign of life, myself".. We wouldn't be having this cordial conversation.
