

---

Subject: NOD or Nod?

Posted by maj.boredom on Wed, 14 May 2003 00:01:17 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Aircraftkiller You're trolling them as well, considering the only useful information you ever give is when someone tells you to lay off posting in threads where I do to annoy me. I'm not sure I follow you. You weren't in this thread and no one asked me lay off.

I have 50 total post now; I must be a hardcore toller. :rolleyes: I challenge anyone who is tempted to believe your ramblings to go to my profile and select the "Find all post by..." and check my post out for themselves. I had to go back 10 just to find a thread that you were involved in. That's where you blindly called someone a Dickhead, remember? I know, that could be one of dozens of your recent posts. On my way through my posts, I past several where I directly helped people and most of the other's are positive comments about peoples work. You do know what a positive comment is, don't you?

Since our post counts are not equal, let's compare percentages of post to positive comments, helpful information or, better yet, non flame involved threads. You take part in hundreds of flame threads that I have nothing to do with. Yet, in the small percentage of flame threads that I am in, you're there too, but the difference is, I'm standing up for the people you are flaming. It's so sad you find that annoying, but such is life. Most of the time they are not even flame threads until you start posting. Is that a coincidence? It's not hard to see. You do the math.

[EDIT] You are right about 1 thing though. The information I posted about ignoring you is "useful". Wait a sec, did you just sneak a positive comment about me in there? You sly dog, you!

---