No, it's not. If you cheat, you make yourself think you're good, while you're crap (or suffer an extreme form of lazyness where even when you are good, you don't want to put any effort in it).

I remember using some built-in cheatcodes in Duke 3d back in the days and finishing the game this way. All the fun was out of it and I never really played the game like I should have. All surprise was gone too.
