Because she obviously doesn't need "care" or "dedication" to spend from her own pocket to keep the community running.

And even if she DID resign, who, pray tell, do you nominate to replace her?

And I fail to see what a single IRCop has to do with the entire community. Are we all one big chatroom? I think not. Last I checked, IRCops managed IRC.

You have no idea how many times people, who have supported her since late 2002, have been disregarded.

If she did resign, I'd say whoever gets a forum up faster will be the new community leader, just like everything else.

The IRCop's attitude reflects Crimson's idea of administration. Have some random, power abusing people who have nothing to do with the Renegade community, step right in, write rules, manage and run a place they have no real connection with.
