Wake the fuck up and get over your bullshit conspiracy theories. I'm sick and tired of it. It's bad enough that this is the 5th year from whence it happened, but we STILL have idiots claiming that Bush and his administration concocted this sinister plot to attack the nation that they run. I wouldn't sabotage my company, would you? I didn't think so.

Very well put Jball.

Seriously though, how can anyone possibly believe that your own government would purposely kill it's own citizens? The fact that someone would even say that is outrageous. America is in debt as is, and the Bush Administration would not purposely attack it's own country. That would put America in even more debt. All the conspiracy folks out there really need to wake up and realize: "The world is at war. Countries will attack countries and people will attack people. If the Bush Administration did attack it's own country purposely, which it did not, the country would most likely develop into a civil war."

Just quote your post, even though I'm addressing j_ball as well. I'm not disagreeing with either of you, just point out some dangerous areas.

j_ball: Be careful here. People do, and have, sabotaged things they own to gain other benefits (in most cases, insurance money). I'm sure you've heard of the rash of charges being laid against Corporate owners who have done improper things with the companies money. That there is perhaps the greatest example of sabotaging their own company. Just because you won't doesn't mean someone else won't.

Dave: The civil war would only come about if people knew that the country was attacked by its own government. What better way to cover it up than to blame terrorists, and then start a war to take the suspicion away from the government? What was that movie called? Wag the dog?

Just to reiterate: I'm not saying I believe the conspiracy theories, just be careful of how you go about arguing against them.
