FMHalo, the only problem with the rocket attacks, in my opinion, is that they are completely and totally worthless. In the last two weeks, Hezbollah has fired some 4,000 rockets in to Israel; I think 6-10 of them have actually hit anything other than a field.

If Hezbollah is trying to use this as leverage for a cease fire, I don't think Israel considers the rockets anything more than a fly in their soup.

Now, if they can actually make them a little more precise, and start causing real havoc in Israel, then they may have a bargaining chip.
