Hey, I'll correct your/you're mistakes. It's an annoying mistake that shouldn't even be an issue. It just requires people to think for a fucking second before they type out whatever they feel like. Like z310's signature says, in a text-based world, spelling and grammar are important. Not the opposite that so many people try to claim. Plus, what can correcting your mistakes hurt? It takes you 5 seconds to correct a mistake that could plague your language skills for a long time. Companies won't hire people who can't pay attention to the smallest details. Those are what count.
