

---

Subject: Re: My jaw.

Posted by trooprm02 on Fri, 08 Sep 2006 19:44:10 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

DrasticDR wrote on Thu, 07 September 2006 18:16I wouldn't worry about any dental visits.

I recently had my long term problem fixed last month. 8 years ago I lost the crown of my front tooth playing hockey and at the time I didn't have the balls to get it fixed. Leaving it made my lower tooth to grow outwards, which caused problems when it came to fixing it. They had to do a root canal and fill my tooth with a metal post to support the new crown, then they had to cut down my bottom tooth slightly for my bite to match. I had an injection to stop the pain and I never felt a thing during the whole procedure. I never did like the dentist but now it doesn't bother me.

Then again, its says your from the Uk, and well teeth and british people don't seem to get along to well according to sayings

---