
Subject: Re: EA's Officially sponsored sites
Posted by Aprime on Mon, 11 Sep 2006 07:25:14 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

MaidenTy1 wrote on Mon, 11 September 2006 03:11 Comrade wrote on Mon, 11 September 2006 02:02 How about patching the God damn game instead of wasting (not really, since you're buying into it) the money on cheap marketing tactics/moves (involves prizes and whatever else) to reinvigorate their image and augment their sales?

I see you edited this post - and all I can say is, are you a communist by any chance? OMFG, A COMPANY WANTS TO PROMOTE A GOOD IMAGE OF THEMSELVES AND THEREBY INCREASE THEIR SALES, UNACCEPTABLE!

They're doing a really, really good thing and you're belittling that generosity because it will improve their image? What the fuck? What would you rather they spent those hundreds of dollars a month on? Some form of advertising, perhaps? That would have roughly the same effect except for the fact players wouldn't getting free games

Yes, sorry about the edit, I wasn't expecting you to read or reply so quickly.

No, I'm not a Communist, they have indeed the right to do this, you qualified their move(s) as brilliant, which is by far, false.

Brilliant would be actual product support, and apart from the "new" (repackaged (or whatever the correct term is to define it) version of the recent one that excluded (yes) Renegade) version of the Level Editor (or those prizes, which are technically worthless), EA has failed their duty to support this game.

"What would you rather they spent those hundreds of dollars a month on?"

Read: Fixing the game.

Sure we're doing a better job than they did, sure! But the truth is, it's not even our job, it's theirs.

I feel bad for all the people who bought Earth and Beyond, seriously.
