Comrade wrote on Mon, 11 September 2006 03:25you qualified their move(s) as brilliant, which is by far, false.

You don't think being able to win free games simply by playing a game you like is brilliant? Let's agree to disagree on that, but don't just say "it's false" on a matter of opinion.

Comrade wrote on Mon, 11 September 2006 03:25Brilliant would be actual product support, and apart from the "new" (repackaged (or whatever the correct term is to define it) version of the recent one that excluded (yes) Renegade) version of the Level Editor
I have no idea what you're talking about.

Comrade wrote on Mon, 11 September 2006 03:25or those prizes, which are technically worthless ...worthless? Any game might grip you the way Renegade has gripped the majority of people on this forum at some point. I guess Renegade is "technically worthless" as well, then?

Comrade wrote on Mon, 11 September 2006 03:25"What would you rather they spent those hundreds of dollars a month on?"

Read: Fixing the game.

Then why don't you get off your lazy ass and do something about it instead of whining? Draw up a proposal and petition EA about it.

Comrade wrote on Mon, 11 September 2006 03:25Sure we're doing a better job than they did, sure! But the truth is, it's not even our job, it's theirs.
Who's "we"?

Comrade wrote on Mon, 11 September 2006 03:25I feel bad for all the people who bought Earth and Beyond, seriously.
Again, don't know what you're talking about.
