
Subject: Re: Global warming

Posted by warranto on Mon, 11 Sep 2006 19:56:09 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Crimson wrote on Mon, 11 September 2006 13:10 Just for reference, the Kyoto Protocol, if followed, would shave 0.11 to 0.20°F off the total projected warming.

30 years ago, it was all about ZGOM GLOBAL COOLING!

http://denisdutton.com/cooling_world.htm

Pff.. all that means is that we've pumped enough gasses into the atmosphere to counteract the natural cooling trend.

Global Warming does occur, at a "normal" rate (normal being used as a reference for what is natural). However, the same gasses that cause the warming trends are the same ones we are putting into the atmosphere as well. The "normal" rate is exponentially lower than the contribution we are making. Even though it is a normal thing to happen, does that mean we want it to happen?
