That's right about where I sit, which is probably why we agree so much. The only thing that concerns me is the "government" getting too much power over the people. Next thing you know we're a 'Roman-Empire-In-The-Making' (or in the process of collapsing, which is more appropriate). It's already getting a bit obnoxious. I love my country and would die for it (I'm a military veteren) but I don't care for my government. One could argue that we elect our officials as this is a democracy, but anything has the potential to corrupt -- and I've seen more corruption than I'm comfortable with recently...

BTW> One of the rules for this thread should have been: "You must be an American citizen to post what you'd do" otherwise all kinds of foreign sentiment will work its way into here.
