
Subject: Re: A sniff of democracy (aka ACK vote)
Posted by cheesesoda on Fri, 06 Oct 2006 13:51:58 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

KIRBY-098Who we used to be has very little bearing on who we are now, and how we treat others now. I would really hate for my loved ones to judge me now for what I did in the Navy. You know, that helps my argument, as well...

What everybody knows him for is the Reborn bashing, the flaming, etc... Why not judge him on what's happened lately?

Non-sensical CAPS LOCK posts... they were pretty damn entertaining. Nobody got the fact that he was just getting a rise out of everybody, just like JohnDoe was doing in the 'Bash Crimson' thread. I don't see JohnDoe's head being on the chopping block...

You have the cats thing... the people who donated him money didn't have a problem for what he used the money for. Not to mention it was brought about by a scorned woman. Well... that's actually quite irrelevant, now that I think of it. This happened in ANOTHER community OUTSIDE of this forum... therefore, if you judge on this, you have no merit for it. End of story.

This whole 'Crimson lying' ordeal... what is so bad in what he's done? I fail to see where bringing up an accusation against someone when it has merit is a bad thing. People may disagree on this, but as a whole, I don't see where this is a big hit on his perceived character. In my opinion, it hurts Crimson more than it does him. The logs that exposed weren't of private information, nor were the ones that he sent to me. He hasn't done anything to personally attack Crimson, just expose lies.

As a whole, if we do as you suggested and judge on recent behavior... I say he hasn't done anything wrong. Spoony's head should be on the chopping block along with Jimbo's, mine, and others' if what Aircraftkiller has done is deserving of a ban.
