
Subject: Re: A sniff of democracy (aka ACK vote)
Posted by cheesesoda on Fri, 06 Oct 2006 14:44:45 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

KIRBY-098I find it very interesting how you choose to interpret any of the above listed actions as appropriate or justified.
I'm not justifying the "cat incident", but it has no bearing on whether or not he should be banned.

I also fail to see how this whole "Crimson lying" situation is such a bad bad thing.

KIRBY-098The very fact that he did something hurtful at all is a huge indicator of his viciousness and vindictive nature.

Because we're all perfect, right? I've done my fair share of things. I stole from my employer a couple years ago, but it doesn't mean that I am or was a bad person... it was just something that shouldn't have been done.

KIRBY-098Whether you two buddies consider it ok or not, the third party involved does not, and that alone should cause you to pause and say "this isn't right for me to have these logs. I don't have permission to read them from all parties."

I've just been too lazy to delete them. I didn't feel right about reading them, so I haven't.

KIRBY-098Why were log being recorded of a peronal conversation at all?

That also spaks volumes about personal character. Was character assasination preplanned? I log all of my IRC conversations. Private or public. I have every right to do so, and it certainly isn't some result of any preplanning to turn on someone. I like copies of my conversations, in case I forget something or I choose to read back on something I discussed earlier. Logging does come in handy.
