
Subject: Re: A sniff of democracy (aka ACK vote)
Posted by cheesesoda on Fri, 06 Oct 2006 19:11:29 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

the17doctorever heard of etiquette? (sp)

not so much laws/rules, but, if the majority of the voters think he is being a complete prick and want him to leave, then the vote will be passed and he will be perm banned.

now, correct me if i am wrong, but, in the law system, if someone is taken to court, the verdict is made by a jury of the defendants peers. now, whether he/she is guilty or not, if they say he/she is guilty, then he will get punished for it.

there is a similar thing here.

Sure, maybe he (and others) should exercise etiquette, but that still doesn't mean it should become a rule.

Sure, someone's taken to court, but it's usually over a question of whether or not someone is guilty of BREAKING A LAW (rule). How can you be taken to court when you don't break a law?
