Seriously, don't.

Lol, I can only imagine a somewhat slight increase in defense for visibly cloaked aircraft. Missiles don't have eyes...they use radar or track to the heat signature of the plane. The pilot might not be able to see the plane visibly but all he would have to do is look down at his radar screen to see the big blob coming toward him. I can see it now, a Russian stealth fighter takes on a American stealth bomber:

American Pilot looking out of cockpit: I can't see him!

Russian Pilot looking at radar screen: I can't see him!

My thoughts exactly. What would Russian planes with those plasma generators look like on radar?

Air Force rookieGeneral! A flying avacado has entered our airspace!
