Remember what I said about taking facts and drawing the wrong conclusions?

Of course the government and the people are separate. Do you realize what problems would arise if EVERYONE got their say in what was going on?

Heck, even with the few people on this forum alone nothing can be agreed upon fully.

The only way a stable society can function is if control is taken out of the average person's hand and placed in someone who represents a group. This would be why America is called a Representative-Democracy as not everyone gets their say, but rather a select few represent a larger group. Heck, that's even taught in school that control is taken away from the average person. If that person who is representing a larger group is corrupt (ie. not representing the will of his group) there is no one to blame but the majority who elected him or her.

as for the existence of the illuminati, or lack thereof remember this: If a famous historical figure mentions something, it must be true!
