Protip: It's completely unacceptable to pay people back by secretly leaking others' work.

Also "we should have a merger" is not a defense.

That completely wasn't my idea. We made no such contract were she would supply me with scripts in exchange for hardware.

I never, under any circumstances, told anyone else that i had these scripts.

They completely failed to respond to servers so i used them for 10-20 minutes tops.

These were a 'bugged' version where everything is displayed translucent and pearlrecent green.

They were completly unusable.

She gave me a link on her own accord to the files on her FTP. I happend to ask what it was and clicked it.

The only people that knew that i had these before the final release was: Me, and Paradox.

The hardware purchasments for her was a donation to keep her alive in this community. Where do you think we would be without her?

To be honest, what I do with MY money is COMLPETELY MY decision. Actions from the person reciving the donations are COMPLETELY THEIR decision, yet you still think it's my fault.

Just end it now, i'm not continuing this argument anymore.

The Merovingian, out.

I guess your mum never taught you to say "no thanks" when somebody offers you drugs either? You didn't have to accept the files.

And yes, you said her "paying you back" with leaked content was "deemed acceptable." Why don't you start reading what you post?

Wait a second, she didn't transfer it over MSN or something, she put it right up on her FTP? Keep talking, this keeps getting deeper.
