You are so PREDICTABLE. You come out with this outlandish claims, and then you expect ME to prove to you? That's not how it works.

What would you say if I was to claim that you're going to die tonight, and then told you to prove to me that you're not? You'd think that I'm an idiot... just as I think of you right now.

This is the story of Christmas: Mary is immaculately impregnated. Joseph and her were not married, and though they didn't have sex, everybody would believe otherwise... I mean, she's pregnant, and they didn't have sex? Unlikely. Anyways, time comes for her to give birth. They try to find shelter, and they end up having to stay in a stable. The baby is born in a stable with animals around them... he's born in a trough/manger. Three wise men follow a STAR and then give GIFTS to Jesus.

In that story I see the nativity scene, a star, and gifts. No sign of any tree... at all. I don't think the three wise men were walking towards the star, saw a tree, chopped it down, and brought it with them to the manger, and strung lights on it. No tree.

If you disagree. YOU prove otherwise. Else, I will laugh at your claims.
