It sounds like they just tried to shut you up. If you don't do something about it, yeah ... you're fine for now ... but then the next guy has to worry about it. I'm not trying to egg you on, because I completely understand your situation and I'm happy for you. But the line has to be drawn somewhere, and if white people keep "tolerating" this kind of bullshit, its not going to get any better.

As for what PuddleSplasher said: "No individual shall be disadvantaged or looked upon less favourably due to race, colour, creed, sex, sexual orientation, age." He was being put at a disadvantage of not getting a job that he was more qualified for because of his race/color. The reason I screamed "DISCRIMINATION!" in my first post in this thread is, because all Affirmative Action is, is discriminating the discriminators. Two wrongs don't make a right. And to add on that, I honestly think that most people would agree (and even find statistics to back this up) that more blacks discriminate whites than whites discriminate blacks.

I was walking down the street with my fiancee about a month ago when an older black man ... who looked kinda shady (not because of his color, but because of the fact that he wasn't shaven and has a strange demeanor to him) started following us. I just blew it off and kept walking. But he continued to walk faster and chase up with us - so finally I told my fiancee that he could be trouble so slow down a bit and walk ahead of me in case he tries to pull some crap. When he caught up to us he was like "can I get a jump" (apparently for his car) and I told him that I was nowhere near my home or vehicle and that I couldn't help him. His response? A very aggressive "Why are all you crackers around here so damn racist?!". Which is pretty damn racist in itself.

I think the discrimination problem has turned on the "working, able-bodied white man" and since we are numerically inferior these days not a damn things is being done about it. That is why I am so adamant about dealing with these kinds of things as they happen...
