
Subject: Re: GRRRRRRRRRRR

Posted by cheesesoda on Mon, 18 Dec 2006 15:31:45 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

MexPirate wrote on Mon, 18 December 2006 10:20j_ball430 wrote on Mon, 18 December 2006 08:49

As for them being less intelligent... that's another product of their environment. A human is a human. Why are Asians better at math than Americans? Because of their culture. Why are more white people in corporate America? Because of their upbringing. The same goes for any race. It's not a product of their race, but a product of their environment. We all live in different environments, and we'll grow up differently because of that.

That bit I would disagree with, Black people on average are bigger built and faster runners than chinese for example - certain physical characteristics are influenced by race and intelligence of certain types can also be affected by race. No argument that culture, lifestyle and upbringing have a much larger effect though.

Our brains are the same, though. It's just how you use it.
