I did look at the facts, and I also realized that they only look at one fucking variable. I don't know how many times I have to say that.

Also, I'm not excusing their lack of ambition. It's entirely their fault, but you want to make it seem like it's hardwired into black people like it's part of their genetics.

It's their environment's fault. There are plenty of black people who realize that living in a shitty house in a shitty community is not what someone should allow themselves to do. There are also a lot of white people who feel that everything should be handed to them, and then they end up in those shitty communities. There's always going to be an exception to a rule. However, the general and OBVIOUS conclusion is that how you're raised is how you're going to view things in life. If you're not taught to live respectably and give others respect, chances are you're going to live like shit and treat others like shit.

$A + B = C$ ;  $A \neq C$ ;  $B \neq C$ . When there are more than one variables to the problem, you can't just look at one to get the solution.
