
Subject: Re: GRRRRRRRRRR

Posted by cheesesoda on Fri, 22 Dec 2006 22:18:19 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

puddle_splasher wrote on Fri, 22 December 2006 16:55I give an opinion!!

Based on many sources, thats what we call, life experience.

On the other hand, YOU want us to believe only in what YOU say.

TuT! TuT!

All differences and sources aside. What do you really believe in your own heart, your own words, your feelings, sentiments?

What do you really believe should be allowed?

Discrimination or non-discrimination and why, in your own words, (100 words maximum)!

Oh and please include why the 14th century is to believed, afterall, if I am correct, you can only really quote the last 5 years, as the other 10 were your childhood?

For that you may have another 12 words such as... "I was not there" or "I know not what happened, but I believe in what I read" well open a newspaper and read a lot of bullsh*t. Do you believe that? Then why should we believe you?

Personally, I think most black people are fucking idiots. They live in poverty and they don't want to better themselves. For that reason, they can go fuck themselves. They don't deserve a job any more than I do, and if they're as qualified as me, they don't deserve it any less. Especially not because of their skin color. The discrimination that they faced, they no longer face. I can understand Affirmative Action for those who were affected by racism back in the '60s, but generations have passed, and these fuckwits don't deserve anything because of discrimination that doesn't happen as widescale as it used to. They need to get over the idea that the white man is out to get them, and if they actually tried to better themselves, the white man may actually hire their ignorant asses.

Look in every textbook and encyclopedia about the Black Plague/Death. You'll find that everything points to the 14th Century. If you don't believe that, then you're obviously someone who chooses to ignore the obvious.

There were plenty records of the Black Plague that were salvaged and found. That's how we know those dates are correct. It's not exactly rocket science.
