

---

Subject: Re: Ding Dong...

Posted by Blazer on Sun, 31 Dec 2006 04:09:00 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

puddle_splasher wrote on Sat, 30 December 2006 05:13 Yeah rejoice that he has been executed and rightly so.

But so far we have 2 sad fuckwits that want to see it????

Flood and Bal, you lower yourselfs to the gutter.

You want to see piss and shit run down someones leg, to see the eyes bulging and bursting out the head, the tongue almost black in colour? You want to see the neck at a grotesque angle where the noose has broken the upper spine?

Were you wanting to watch the twitching and kicking of a body in its death throes?

Truly there are some sad fucks that get their kicks out of watching people die. Never did I expect to read it from both of you.

You 2 are the type of people that I tell politely "Fuck Off" when I see you hanging around any of my Fires where bodies are involved or at any of the Road traffic Crashes that I attend.

Seeing someone in their final death throes, is not a pretty sight nor should it be openly publicised. I see death on a regular basis, its not nice, its very traumatic to the witness, but we have to live with it, as its my job. However to want to see death, is way beyond me.

Most of you accept, without question, what has happened in history, without visual proof.

Im afraid you may have to accept this death, without visual proof also.

Maybe they will be horrified and wish they had never seen it, maybe they will think its amusing and discover that they are what society would consider a "sick" person. Either way it's their choice to as to what they want to experience.

It's human nature to be curious about the unknown, especially things that are considered taboo or grotesque.

---