Sanada78l personally think that video tutorials should be developed. There's software you can download that you can use too create them. Letting them see what you're doing will give a much better perspective. Only trouble is they can get too big in file size.

I don't know if you've ever seen any of my tutorials, but I do use plenty of stills, I like stills, that way you follow along and not just blow through a quick video and then don't remember what you just watched, I try to do tutorials that walk you through it and when your done you have a nice piece of what ever it was that the tutorial just walked you through like my Boolean tutorial, you end anyways, then poop. Lol know what I mean? Again, thanks for your input. It would be nice to see this community get back to helping people/modders again, instead of all the flaming and putdowns that seem to be so grand in scale on this forum.
