Vista is for e-penis people. Windows XP runs most things you will need while only managing to totally hog 200 megs of ram. Why upgrade to microsofts newest pig which hordes 500 megs of ram?

I personally would rather have my ram working at loading maps. I don't give a rats ass if I can spin around folders in 360's. If you always run into organization problems and have 20 folders open at once setup up a dual monitor display.

Vista is unnecessary.
