
Subject: Re: Ding Dong...

Posted by fl00d3d on Fri, 05 Jan 2007 19:22:21 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

puddle_splasher wrote on Wed, 03 January 2007 15:43fl00d3d wrote on Wed, 03 January 2007 10:14

I wanted to see the look on his face before they put the noose around his neck ... knowing it was his last minutes ... wondering what was going on in his mind.

Thats the point that I am trying to make.

WHY do you wonder? What will it achieve for you? Where are you going to look for more videos?

What did you learn about his last thoughts? Why do you personally need to know his thoughts? Had you found out his thoughts, what would you have done with them?

If any of your family had been killed, directly or indirectly at his hands or his soldiers, then I can understand the feelings, but if not.....

It appears that you have more than just a morbid curiosity to death. You seem to thrive on this.

Seek phsycological help for your inner thoughts and feelings before it is too late.

I have spent time in the Persian Gulf (active duty military), nearly lost my life in combat, and have had friends (not family) that died due to shitheads LIKE him (not necessarily him). To me, watching the video shows me justice and that going into Iraq for no other reason but to capture and hang that dirtbag was worth it.

XPtek knows all about self sacrifice and living outside the saftey of his mommy's house, so I should give two shits what he has to say about my views on true justice...

puddle_splasher wrote on Fri, 05 January 2007 14:11Just when we thought it was over, I opened the newspaper and read some tragic news.

2 kids, aged 9 from Texas and the other aged 10 from Pakistan, died after attempting to reconstruct the hanging of Saddam.

It states that they had both seen the video and were killed in a tragic accident, whilst hanging from their bedroom ceiling.

Yeah, I know they were young and impressionable, just as I know that you are all older and wont attempt it.

But its still very tragic that 2 recorded deaths could have been prevented by not showing the video. At that age you have to question parental control, even if we cannot observe the children at all times, something needs to be done to prevent these accidents.

Any ideas?

Tragic, but I think at their age they're smart enough to know that it would kill them. They may have been a bit ignorant about getting out of the situation, but I definitely would NOT blame the media for their death.
