warranto wrote on Thu, 18 January 2007 08:38 You're saying that the business should be punished because of the actions of one of its employees. I'm simply pointing out how it does not work that way. If a business were to be punished for the actions of one of its employees, it would have... (refer to my previous post).

You don't have to defend people to be ambitious.

Please quote where I say so. I'm talking about losing the trust of the people, not legal actions.
