Only if they were done in the name of the company, or done by a person in a position of power within the company.

I don't know about you, but I'll continue going to the convenience store despite one of it's employees being caught stealing from someone else.

Wrong analogy, try "...cought vandalizing someone's property and the fully aware owner keeping it a secret from the public and lying to the police when questioned." I sure as hell wouldn't buy there.

C'mon, we've gone down this road before...I know you see this as an opportunity to practice how to defend a clearly guilty client, but to people who don't know about your lawschool ambitions, you just seem like a mindless n00bstories drone.

Well put. THAT explains why he goes so far out of his way (while looking like a complete retard) to try to prove us wrong.

JohnDoe:

Unfortunately that analogy doesn't work. No one says that you MUST report all crimes (no one was questioned by a figure of authority here). Even if Crimson knew about it, it was not done in the name of BHS, therefor there is no connection that can be made. No court would deal a punishment against the business for the action of an individual done in his private time, even if that business knew about it. There was no association of the business with the crime, therefor the business can not be blamed for the crime.

No matter how you wish otherwise, all you have to rely on is your petty indulgence against them in trying to find whatever you can to make them look bad.

As for this lawyer thing, where do you get the idea that I'm going to be defending people?

Jimbo:

This coming from someone who financially supports n00bstories. "Crimson is bad, but I'll still give her money!"

1. When did I say crimson is bad? for the most part I am in praise of what she has done.

2. When did I give her money?

Troopr: Don't even TALK to me about being a retard. You've been commonly accepted as the most PITIFUL person on these forum. Grow the fukk up nerd.
