haha

You forgot to mention that everyone on the opposite team said you were cheating, and Kozar personally witnessed you headshot a strafing flamethrower while you were engulfed in flame. Any sniper knows that flamethrowers completely blind them, so getting a headshot off under those circumstances was the last straw.

After you were kicked, several of the players made comments like "thank you", "took long enough"...Kozar told them that he had to be sure and see you cheating for himself before he kicked you.

There were two or three people who were accusing me of cheating, the most vocal of which had left the game several minutes before I was kicked. You said something from IRC yourself about how it didn't look like I was cheating and the accusations seemed to stop after that. In fact, I'd thought the issue had died down so   I was surprised when he banned me about 10 minutes later. Mostly I just think his reason sounded funny.

Lmfao. Blazer, remember that units remain targeted regardless of whether or not there is fire in the way or not.

but the flames were IN HIS FACE, jimbo
