Here's my small take on global warming.

I personally don't put much credence in global warming, since there's not been much hardcore scientific data directly linking man with an increase in temperature.

But that's besides the point. I don't really mind people who go and blab about global warming and how we're all gonna die. What I do mind is when people blame it on the U.S. gov't. It's like "omg teh US is causing teh glober warmin thing cuz they attacked iraq guyz."

Now if global warming is a reality, I'll be the first one to say the U.S. had A part in it, since the age of industry in the 20's and such, but you can't just point fingers at the U.S.

For example, if you've studied anything about Mexico City you'd know that breathing the air is equivalent to smoking a few cigarettes.

I forget who said it (too lazy to look) but the U.S. is also taking a major part in trying to reduce global warming.

[/pro-US rant]
