Now I have the problem under control, but my question is can this virus travel in flash drives (even If a program has not been accessed on the drive can it spread off of it).
As for all the people that called me lazy, maybe you should stop being lazy and read my the entire topic, I did say that it was already under control in the topic.

The question was if a virus could get onto a flash drive, and execute itself upon the flash drive being attached to the computer, even if no files on the flash drive were opened or even the drive opened in explorer.

I know that they can attach themselves to files and the when the file is opened/executed the virus starts running, but could the virus start itself up from a flash drive was the actual question.
