

---

Subject: Re: The meaning of life?

Posted by Nightma12 on Wed, 25 Apr 2007 16:42:22 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

AoBfrost wrote on Wed, 25 April 2007 10:39 Well, you see theres a problem, I'm not aiming toward any of you individuals, but I say that if you believe that you are truly catholic/christian then why believe in the big bang when they contradict what you claim you are, if you truly christian/catholic then you believe God made you, and not the way crap science brings out today, all of these big bang theory's are just taught in schools because some don't want to learn about creation, so then others who might want to are disabled from the ability to learn about it, teaching only 1 viewpoint in school is what then make kids believe that's how the world started, schools today don't even give the chance to teach creationism anymore, I think schools should have 2 science classes during the time when they teach about evolution, 1 for evolution and 1 for creationism.

read my post... please explain to me how science + creationism contradict? they completely help each other

God CREATED everything we see today THOUGH the big bang. and about 7 days... a day is how long the earth takes to spin around once? however.. as there was no earth at this time, how exactly long was a day back then? it could be ample amount of time

---