If you ask a Ned in the street why he carries a knife he will tell you "Cause the others carry knives and might stab me so I need a knife to defend myself".

Now if you ask the same question but substitute knife for gun, he will say "Cause the others carry a gun and might shoot me so I need a gun to defend myself".

Therefore if no-one carried weapons, then there would be no need to defend ones self with knives and guns.

Thankfully the UK is a country that does not "have the right to bear arms" and long may it last.

...in theory that works. In practice, it means that the only people who would have a gun are not law-abiding citizens. Stop me if you can't see the flaw.
