You could say that, and a lot of people do say that. It runs deeper, though. In school, we are not treated as individuals. We are not allowed to express an opinion. The teachers don't care if we get good grades or not, we've actually been told this. Everything we do is watched over as if we are totally and utterly stupid. Uniform is a big part of the school, and i don't mind at all wearing dress codes and looking "smart". It's just when you don't look smart and uniform is terrible. The teachers look at you as if you're just scum.

I had a week working (voluntary) at a hospital. I had to wear shirt, tie black trousers and shoes. I had to do stuff that weren't particularly good jobs, EG: unpack 100 computer and 100 monitors and store them but i would much rather have a job there than go to school.
