If welfare was only restricted to disabled people, there shouldn't be many people disabled anyway. Plus maybe make a law for giving the disabled person a minimum (say $500000?) amount of disability pension. IF thats not enough (wtf? 500k is not enough???) they can get state welfare (say $2000?) thats a good amount in the U.S. or Canada. Since right now Canadian welfare is about $1000...I think...Plus every country has SOME form of national debt (except U.S. but who else is as rich as them Americans???)

Erm, wrong.

Canadian Welfare is 625/ Month.

Disability, is 1000+ Depending on injury per month.

Disability in canada is WAY too easy to claim, I myself, could claim it, because of my one knee.

Busted it pretty bad in football last year, hurts to bend.

But I chose not to, I chose to go in work.

I guess in 15 years, when my cartilage in my knee is fully gone, Then yea, I'll go on disability, and even then, I might chose to work from home, kinda like Crimmy does.

But I have no Coding, Programming, or Computer sence, other then how to put one together.

So I'd have to find something else to do from home, probably advertising, which I think is PURE bullshit.

Those online surveys, which yea, do pay some money. (You can do them everyday, and make money)

And maybe connect myself with Insurance brokers, like my mom does, get a business line, make myself available 8 hours a day.

Now that last one, is my best option.

Most cash, most reliable, most secure.
