Say you are the owner of a store. You get one person that comes in and argues with you that your service is complete and utter crap. You then start banning people from your store that complain about it. You keep doing that and soon enough you have less and less profit coming in because you banned all your customers. Sooner or later, you better stop banning people and make your services better or you're going to go bankrupt.

I think JBall's, or erm, "cheesesoda's" point was the last line. (Sorry, I just liked JBall a lot better)
