Unfortunately in the UK car boot sales are not so much about raising money for charity (although Church ones still are), they are more about a place to fence off stolen goods or illegal cigarettes, pirate porno DVD'S etc etc.

And the honest people there can only really sell second hand clothes, but the only people who buy that shit are the Afgans and immigrants from Eastern block tinpot countries. They get a whole new wardrobe for like 3 pounds.

Most of the Black people who buy that stuff then send it back to Africa where the cousin/uncle/dad has a shop or stall, or some donkey whatever, and then they sell it to all the little village peasants. And because it is only gypies, tramps, thieves and immigrants who now go to these things you can't sell anything with a value higher then one pound, which is why people just sell there second hand clothes for junk prices, furthering the problem...

Some places are more regulated, but not many.

Lat thing I purchased was some star wars figures when I was eight/nine years old.
