I had forgot a pocket knife in the front pouch of my backpack on my way back from England two summers ago, and it went though airport security at Heathrow no problem. Only at Montreal airport did it get detected and thrown into a big bin with other stuff that's not allowed.

Airport security is a joke in my opinion, but I'm still angry that I forgot that knife in there. At least it didn't get detected in England, that would have been bad probably.
