Most of the complaints about vista come from idiots that A.)Installed it on a system well under the recommended spec. (512mb RAM Celeron Processor) or B.) Don't understand the simple concept of driver updates to comply with Vista's new architecture. I work at Best Buy in the computers area and what I typically hear is "I don't want that vista it is a piece of junk." I usually respond "Why, what gives you that idea?" I either get the response "UH I DUNNO LOL." or "Because that one ad said so." (referring to the Apple Mac ads.) Most people don't know shit about vista or realize that it is a necessary move to force companies to stop making their slow 512mb Single Core machines and start making beefier machines for tommrow. So quit your bitching and get used to it, it isn't going away just like XP didn't go away. 6 years from now you'll be bitching that you don't want to buy a Windows blahblah machine. Get the fuck over yourselves.

Damn me for trying it on a "Vista-certified" machine!

Nvidia's drivers still have grave issues on Vista.

Apple's ads are stupid, yes (PC guy rocks tho).

Actually, make that three years, according to Microsoft, making the upgrade totally worthless - it reminds me of Windows ME.

lol @ "necessary move" - just shut up, AJ.

I just bought a Vista-powered machine (Dell, and why turn down a free license?) and I'm installing OSX on it (I'm receiving a new 24" iMac tomorrow). :V

I'll be dual-booting on the iMac, but not on the laptop.

This coming from a person who just bought a Dell and Mac.
