Quote:Pownce is a web service that lets you "share stuff with your friends". Translated into non-retard speak, this means "a website where you can go to put notes and files and shit up for other users". What was that? You remember FTP too? Yeah, from nineteen seventy-fucking one? Now it has pastel colors, and it's invite-only.

TBH there are much better options out there (Shared Folders in MSN), file storage sites, I personally prefer to use my server to move files, but it's good of you to offer invites if people are interested.

I think it's quite useful and pointless at the same time.

I HATE the MSN shared files. It takes 20 minutes to upload to the folder, then the other person has to download it after that. FTP is quicker, but then you have the hassle of letting everybody get your files if they're on a site, or give people access to the FTP if you only want a few specific people to access it.

File sharing sites are fine, too, but too much hassle and not as many things that you can "share".
