

---

Subject: Re: Why the US really wants to go to war with Iran

Posted by cheesesoda on Sun, 28 Oct 2007 17:43:20 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

SSADMVRIol... First Your leaders go way beyond criticizing, they actually tell european leaders what to do, how to do it and when to do it, u havent seen how Bush dragged half of Europe into the war against Iraq? Second, ofcourse there isnt as much criticism on European leaders as on Bush, That is because Bush is the single most powerful man on the earth, no european leader comes even close that. So ofcourse he's gonna get more criticism...
And my point went right over your head. Should I be surprised? Probably not.

I wasn't talking about any elected leaders. I am talking about regular residents of European countries making it more of a point to discuss (and insult) American politics more than Americans care to discuss yours.

SSADMVRI wasnt talking about the fact it happened so suddenly, im saying it shouldnt have happened at all...

That's not what you said. Regardless, if your country was attacked, and most politicians even agreed upon another country posing a threat (you should see some quotes that top Democrats said before 2003 about Iraq and Saddam. You would think they wouldn't be so hypocritical now).

SSADMVRI myself dislike to much governemental interference in daily life, but when it comes to a disaster like Katrina and the presidents is nowhere to be seen, what the fuck does that tell you? It's not the president's job to survey the area like so many people think. Bush (or any other president past and future) can't personally change anything by visiting.

SSADMVRYou might not realise it, but America will hit a recession in little time, people have used the most amount of money they can possibly borrow from banks while using their houses as financing for it. Now the worth of houses is falling and people can barely afford to pay their monthly amount of money they need to pay to keep their house leading to the worth of houses even decreasing more and more dragging America and probably even Europe into recession. Bush should've done something about this instead of constantly purely focusing on the so-called war against terrorism (wich is not even the correct term for what Bush is actually doing) and pretty much investing all of America's funds in it.

Care to pay attention to what I actually said? I admitted that we will probably be hitting a recession, but that still doesn't change the fact that our economy is stronger than it has been in years.

Honestly, it's not the government's job to oversee the economy. There needs to be much more economic freedom than there is. I couldn't give a fuck less if the federal government destroyed the Federal Reserve. Actually, I'd support that.