

---

Subject: Re: Why the US really wants to go to war with Iran

Posted by R315r4z0r on Mon, 29 Oct 2007 20:15:14 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

SSADMVR wrote on Mon, 29 October 2007 13:56 The US combat losses would have been lower without any war.

Yea.. but more Iraqi civilians would be tortured and killed with no real purpose.

Dying to protect someone else's sake is much better than dying for no real purpose.

So what you're basically saying is that if you were head of a world power that could easily stop senseless killings in another country with low effort, you would rather keep all your people in your country and let other people just die?

And another thing, if we didn't retaliate against Afghanistan when 9/11 happened, our entire country could possibly have been an entire battlefield today for all we know.

The US retaliating shows that they aren't going to let themselves, as a country, be pushed around. If they just let it go, and allowed Afghanistan to live on, possibly many other countries and even other world powers would have moved in on the US and started a war in our own backyards.

..well maybe nothing THAT extreme, but if we didn't fight back, it would give the US an image that says "Attack us, and we won't fight back!"

---