My parents owned one of those cars for a week. My mom made my dad get rid of it because...

"You will get killed in this thing and I will loose my license."

The guy they bought it from before when he first bought it took it to a race shop and had it balanced and blue printed. The engine was so smooth after that, that you could balance a nickel on it when the engine was running and it wouldn't fall over. That car is one of 212 ever made and we owned one. I wish we still had that car.

They're real beauties, aren't they? I've seen two in my lifetime, and I would sell my soul (I kinda already have ) to get my hands on one. I especially love it, because it was the model that General Motors used to throw the finger to the Environmental Protection Agency, and their idiotic pollution test at the time.
