
Subject: Re: Killing a enemy vechile with an orca or apache

Posted by Starbuzz on Mon, 05 Nov 2007 04:27:05 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Renegerage wrote on Sun, 04 November 2007 21:48Rocko wrote on Fri, 02 November 2007 21:131
time i stopped a stank rush with just my orca

Wow, you must feel good.

Stanks were worrying about their objective, not some prickjob shooting from above.

WOW...you actually sticking up for the stupid stank drivers? Idiots should have been more careful when there's a Orca flying overhead instead of attacking like stupid n00bs.

Even in the most Orca infested skies, I NEVER was discovered by an Orca when I was in a Stank...it's about knowing when to lie low, when to attack and when to retreat.

A Stealth Tank is a 900C investement...I would protect it if you understood it's value FFS.

A successful stank rush is when there is no enemy air and land activity so that the stanks survive and destroy at least one or multiple buildings. If there are enemy aircraft nearby and the stupid idiot stanks attack, then the Orca pilot is not a prickjob for "shooting from above" while the stanks are "worrying about their objective."

For the 1st time, good job Rocko.

I have stopped many stank rushes and/or alerted my team to an impending rush ultimately leading to a successful defense.

And yes, I am feeling very good and hot because of stopping many stank rushes.

And how can you say he's a prickjob? And for what? Doing his job right?
