While we are on the subject of aliens:

<http://www.cnn.com/2007/TECH/science/11/09/simington.ufocommentary/index.html?ir ef=mpstoryview>

I was also talking to some coworkers on our internal IRC, and made a couple of points:

<Charles> You know what's odd...there could be a massive UFO sighting..like let's say a giant UFO landed on top of the parking garage, and sat there for an hour, and thousands of people saw it...it would maybe be on the local news, and maybe a sub-headline on cnn.com for a few hours, and then within a couple days it would be as if it never happened

<Charles> I see stuff in the news all the time that makes one go HOLY CRAP, but in a day or two it fades away and nobody follows up on it or anything

I mention this because that news story actually makes reference to a similar situation, awhile back there was a massive UFO sighting at the chicago airport...thousands of people saw it and it was there for several minutes...yet within a couple of days the story was buried...why is that? It makes you wonder just what exactly has to happen for it to be "common knowledge" that there are real UFO's and whatnot. So far it looks like a UFO could land, and an alien could step out, and pee on everyones face, go "hah!" and then fly off, and week later nobody would even remember it happened and still be wondering if UFOs are real.
