Again, internet speed has NOTHING to do with your PC hardware or version of Windows (I think, although I can't imagine Win95 being able to comprehend anything faster than a snail.)

The only software that MAY affect your speed is an excess buildup of spyware/viruses/trojans/etc. that like to collect data and send it off to remote locations via the internet, therefore taking up your bandwidth. Programs that also like to send your personal information out will take up bandwidth, but again, only if you have like 100 of them all trying to send info at once, and if you're stupid enough to actually enable sending of personal information.
