

---

Subject: Re: Pro Life or Pro choice?

Posted by Chimp on Wed, 09 Jan 2008 15:51:44 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Jecht wrote on Wed, 09 January 2008 10:15: Life begins at conception. Experiments showing the capacity for learning at three months do not ensure life begins there. There are several organisms without the capacity to learn at all, yet are they any less alive?

Everyone speaks out about how the mother should have the choice to whether she wants the baby or not, but where is the voice of the child? If given the chance, would they choose to live or die? Rape is unfortunate, but the child did not choose to be a product of rape any more than the woman chooses to be the victim of it. It's an enormous burden that's placed on the woman, but (and my fiancée thinks the same) she should birth the child and give it to an adoption agency. Subsequently, there should be MUCH harsher punishment upon rapists to deter this activity up to, and including capital punishment. That's a completely different topic though.

Abortion is murder, and women should be educated about the alternatives prior to abortion so that they don't make a choice that they would regret later in life. There is one instance for when abortion should be legal, and only one from my current viewpoint. That is the case for when the mother could be harmed in the case of birthing, or carrying the child.

Some people don't want their genes combined with someone else. My philosophy is, the kid can't think, they can't speak, they can't "really" feel. If the mother wants to get rid of them, let her, because of she doesn't? That kid may WISH they were never born living with someone like that.

---