

---

Subject: Re: Pro Life or Pro choice?

Posted by Chimp on Fri, 11 Jan 2008 22:12:03 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

I agree.

Heres a better analogy.

A chicken egg can turn into a Chicken. It can also turn into my breakfast. Are they the same? No. They're completely different. Until its a human. Its not a human.

Lets just remind everyone: If you can't think, can't feel, can't act, can't do ANYTHING, I have some news for you....You aren't alive, and you most certainly aren't human. The "child" can't say HEY, DON'T KILL ME! They don't think, therefore, they don't care. The sad reality would be, if a 5 year old child were to die instantly, just vaporized into thin air, they would never know, and wouldn't be sad. Thats why its stupid to say things like "Oh poor billy. He didn't even get the chance to have a life". People forget. The dead person doesn't care, its YOU who cares.

My view is, if the woman has a legitimate reason, or a reason that could keep from endangering society further, let her do it.

---